DETAILS OF FIGHT OVER BALLOTING

Bulletin Representative

Allowed To Stay

By Vote

At about 1:30 yesterday afternoon the meeting of the Committee on Rules, which had been adjourned until 1:30 p. m., began business, taking up the rule which they left them at noon, still using last year's rules as a basis.

Clark said the committee had arrived at the most vital point to be treated and that all persons not connected with the committee be excluded.

Drake offered the amendment that the rule be excepted from this, Johnson recorded the amendment, which was carried. Clark thereupon withdrew the original motion.

The ballot rule was then taken up. Brock moved that the rule be as follows: In making nominations for office the voting shall in all cases where there is more than one nominee be by secret ballot and it shall be compulsory on each delegate before casting a ballot to enter the booth provided for that purpose and mark his ballot.

Clark moved to pass the rule in the above form.

Johnson offered an amendment to the effect that it should not be "compulsory" but "the privilege" to go into the booths. He said he did not want to be driven into a booth like a horse.

He wanted to mark his ballot in the open. This was seconded by Swift.

Makalea spoke in favor of Brock's motion. The booths were there and should be used. Vida said it was up to the Fourth to keep faith with the Fifth. The matter had been decided at caucus.

Johnson said that if it was the sense of the caucus that it was compulsory he would withdraw his amendment. Brock said that the compulsory clause was a bitter pill to him, but the caucus had decided in favor of it, and he felt bound by its action. Johnson wanted to know if the word "compulsory" had been used in the caucus. Brock said the matter had been submitted to the committee, and these had decided that it was compulsory. Not a single precinct of the Fourth had objected to the compulsory clause. Johnson thereupon withdrew his amendment.

Morgan said he did not see why he should be compelled to vote in a booth. He did not care who saw his ballot, and preferred to mark his ballot in the open. However, he saw the matter in the same light as Johnson. The rule was then carried as proposed by Johnson.

Clark moved that a rule be adopted to the effect that no ballot should be used except those authorized and furnished by the chairman of the convention. This was adopted as well as a rule formally providing for the four kinds of ballots to be used. It was also decided that the ballots should be cast on the call by the precincts in numerical order, the Fourth District first.

Brock moved that the judges of election, tellers and all other necessary officers connected with the balloting be appointed by the Chair. Carried.

Fernandez moved that the delegates should designate their choice by marking the ballot with a cross opposite the name of the candidate. Carried.

It was also decided that in cases of mismarking of a ballot it should only invalidate the vote for the particular office in regard to which the mistake was made.

The next couple of the old rules were passed in the form used last year.

The next rule was the one relating to the presence of candidates, which has been dubbed the "Dillingham rule." Brock moved to pass the rule in the form that every candidate must be present to take the pledge or furnish satisfactory evidence to the same effect. Fernandez wanted to make it read "written pledge." Drake amended it to read that the candidates should, before the balloting began, "openly pledge themselves." Clark said "a cable" or other evidence of that kind should not be taken to be satisfactory. Johnson said he was opposed to the amendment, as it was directly aimed against Dillingham and Rawlins. He sang their praises for a short while and stated that Dillingham had openly announced himself, and that he would support the platform if he wrote a letter saying he would do so. A cablegram or a letter was the best evidence. Johnson wanted fair play. In fair play the amendment should not be adopted.

Drake answered that Rawlins was not absent. In fairness to all of the candidates, the amendment should be adopted. Brock said Dillingham was absent at the amendment. It should be up to the convention and not to the committee to exclude him from running, although he had large support. It was only fair that written evidence should be received.

Boyd said it was understood that all the nominees were good Republicans and their presence or absence was immaterial. Dillingham was away on business, which was to his credit, and he should not be debarré for that reason. The rule had originally been railroaded into the convention for a purpose, and repetition of this should not be allowed.

Cox moved to table the amendment, but the vote was taken on it, resulting in the killing of the amendment by a vote of 3 ayes and 17 noes, only Drake, Clark and Makalea voting for it. On motion by Drake the vote was made unanimous, and the original motion allowing the pledge by absentees by the furnishing of satisfactory evidence was adopted.

Lilikalani then asked to reconsider the vote taken on the rule relating to committees, making a fine, flowing speech. Cox roared Dillingham for his change of heart. He said it looked as if he had been threatened by his precinct and was afraid of it. He should be made to give the reason for his change of mind. Lilikalani answered with another long speech.

The motion to reconsider was then put and lot by a vote of 12 ayes and 8 noes, a two-thirds vote being necessary.

The last rules, concerning a quorum and the suspension of rules, were passed in the form used last year. With the latter was included a provision to the effect that no member of the convention should be allowed the floor for more than five minutes on any subject.

WONDER OF THE WORLD

worth the time and trouble necessary to take it, and I am glad I went.

"Coming back the Kinaiu had a full passenger list, much greater than there were any accommodations for, and lots of the passengers had to sleep on deck. But the weather was fine and nobody minded greatly. I think nearly everybody has only one regret, and that is that we could not have had more time to spend in sight-seeing before we returned."

Pleasant But Seaside.

"We had a very nice trip," said J. F. Davis, and we all enjoyed it in spite of some of the party being pretty seashore on the way over. Everybody treated us well, and the volcano is worth going a long way to see. I am glad that I made the trip."

E. F. Van Leuven, of the San Bernardino Evening Index, expressed himself as well pleased with the excursion. "Everything was all right," he said, "and we had a good time. I wouldn't have missed it for a good deal."

Long Beach Tribune.

I. S. Watson of the Long Beach Evening Tribune: "The volcano is a sight which no one who comes to the Islands should miss seeing. Some of us thought that the trip might be too tough, but everyone who did go, even those of us who suffered most from seasickness, were glad that they went. I would not have missed the trip at any cost."

"It was a cool day when we were at the volcano. It rained part of the time, but the clouds lifted frequently enough to allow us to see almost everything there was to be seen. The ride up to the volcano through the canefields and banana patches was also a source of great pleasure."

"Regarding the Volcano itself, the only word of disappointment I can say is that the vapor hid the molten lava from view, most of us having had the impression that we would see a lake of fire. We toasted postal cards and the lava and heated coffee and did all the usual stunts."

"As I said, the Volcano trip is one which everyone who comes here should take, and as a party we want to express our party appreciation of the excellent and courteous treatment we received and particularly of the fine way in which we were taken care of at the Volcano House. I would not have missed the trip for $100. The luncheon at Hilo was another enjoyable feature of the trip. It was a royal, grand affair, which was carried off in good shape."

Los Angeles Herald.

L. F. Doolittle of the Los Angeles Herald: "The trip to the Volcano is the best entertainment we have had since we came here. It was entirely novel in every way. None of us had ever seen a volcano, extinct or active, before, and we were glad to have the opportunity to see one. Of course, it rained all the day we were there, but that did not deter the party from making the trip around it, although steam concealed the main crater."

"The trip on the Kinaiu was a rough one and many of the party were seasick. The way Hilo entertained us was astonishing. It was something we would not have received of any town of a similar size in the States. Of course, the feast which was given us, was new to us, though the line of procedure at it was somewhat different to what we were used to, but I am sure we all ate as much as we could, and the occasion was further enlivened by speeches and a dance, which followed the luncheon."

Los Angeles Journal.

Warren Wilson of the Los Angeles Journal: "We were wonderfully impressed with the unique entertainment which was given us at Hilo. It was spontaneous and generous in every respect, and all seemed to turn out to meet us. What impressed me especially was the great variety of native dishes at the luncheon, though of course a newcomer could not get the full enjoyment out of them; but the unique character of the feast could certainly not be exceeded."

"The Volcano was the first one, active or extinct, that anyone of the party had seen. We were profoundly impressed with its magnitude, the extent of the lava flows, and the awful force of nature which produced such a gigantic cataclysm. The crater of Halemaunau was shrouded in mist, and the sight produced a vague feeling of awe and dread, as if it were shrouded in mystery. I am sure that all of us are glad that they undertook the trip. The scene is not as extensive as the Grand Canyon of Colorado, but the evidence of a more recent display of Titanic forces was mightier and more impressive than anything I have ever seen before. There were only six horses available at
